What's in a Name?

Editor:

In the interest of "see/say," I must say that I am sickeningly disgusted by the large billboard on U.S. Highway 101 advertising the band Cherry Poppin' Daddies. As a victim of child incest, I find the name of this band triggers my PTSD every day as I drive to and from work. Why not just call the band "Ugly Middle-aged sex abusers of their own daughters" instead?

The grimly leering faces of these jerks are a testament to insensitivity in the name of misogyny and they don't belong in the bucolic rural scenery of our beautiful roadway. I say boycott Blue Lake Casino until they take the sign down.

It Won't Stop Them

Editor:

Do we need any more traffic signals in Eureka? ("Big Changes Considered for 101 Through Eureka," posted Feb. 24.) Drivers don't stop for them anyway. Sit at any red light on any street facing Broadway and watch how many vehicles don't stop when the lights turn yellow and red. There will be between two and five drivers every time.

Rather than spending millions of dollars on traffic lights and infrastructure projects that help developers line their pockets, why don't we spend the money on fixing potholes and street repair? Eureka has more potholes per capita than any town I've been in.

A Room with a View?

Editor:

I have questions regarding the upscale hotel proposed to be built on Broadway ("Making Rooms," May 16). Is someone really going to build an "upscale" hotel a couple of hundred yards from the Humboldt Waste Management Authority transfer station, aka the dump? Will the city close the dump to accommodate the hotel developers? With Humboldt Waste Management Authority losing previous income from recycling, are they hoping to close down the operation? Was this issue discussed during negotiations? Is it referenced in the agreement? The article mentions a property behind the Chamber of Commerce site, without any explanation of what that means.

Steve Millsbaugh, Eureka

Editor's Note: HWMA Executive Director Jill Duffy told the Journal that the agency doesn't foresee any changes to operations at the transfer station, which serves the entire county and is a "critical part of solid waste infrastructure" for the region, including diversion programs and household waste disposal. Duffy noted that she did ask the city manager and community development director to make sure interested parties were informed of the the station's proximity to the project site.

‘So Sad’

Arcata shooting leaves one teen dead, another behind bars

By Kimberly Wear

kim@northcoastjournal.com

A Eureka High School senior was killed and another teenager is facing murder and attempted murder charges after an apparent marijuana deal turned deadly at an Arcata bus stop over the holiday weekend.

Taevonne Latimer, 18, was shot multiple times in the torso just before 10 p.m. May 26 as he and three friends met with someone they believed was a prospective buyer on Foster Avenue, just east of Alliance Road, after they arranged the sale through the social media messaging app Snapchat. One of Latimer's friends was also shot in the leg but survived and was released from the hospital.

The death has rocked many in the Eureka High School community, coming just a few weeks before graduation, with one of Latimer's friends telling Redheaded Blackbelt that the day that should be a celebration will now carry the shadow of his loss.

"I know everyone is going to be remembering him," fellow EHS senior Tianna

Canfield said. "It just makes me so sad."

Arcata Police Chief Brian Ahern told the Journal that the fatal shooting apparently occurred over $50 worth of cannabis based on the accounts of the victims, who said the suspect attempted to rob them and opened fire when they refused.

"It sounds like a transaction that turned into a robbery," Ahern said, adding that investigators are still working to piece together exactly what happened. "That picture is being built right now but it's not complete."

When officers arrived on scene, a couple visiting from out of the area was rendering aid to the injured teens. By then, the shooter had fled and a massive law enforcement search effort ensued with multiple agencies assisting.

Tony Wallin, a journalism student at Humboldt State University who came on the scene almost immediately after the shooting, described to Redheaded Blackbelt how Latimer's friends asked him to call 911, saying, "We've been shot. ... They were trying to rob us."

"Those three were distraught. That was their friend and you could hear it. They were saying his name," Wallin said. "They were shook ... their friend was dying and you could feel it. It was very sad and very emotional."

A 16-year-old Manila resident surrendered himself to the Arcata Police Department the next day. He was booked into juvenile hall on suspicion of murder and attempted murder.

During the investigation, APD detectives

"developed information" that led them to believe the teen was involved in the shooting. He turned himself in just before 1 p.m. May 27 while accompanied by a family member.

The APD said in a release that the agency will not be releasing the name of the suspect because he is a minor.

Ahearn told the Journal on Tuesday that the gun used in the killing has not been located and the department has not learned how the suspect was reportedly able to access the weapon.

Latimer's death continues a seven-year spike in violent crime in Arcata, with the college town seeing nine homicides since the beginning of 2013. In the 22-year span before that — 1991 to 2012 — there were five.

Canfield said she was having a difficult time coming to terms with the loss of a friend she has known since the seventh grade.

"I feel like every kid in Humboldt is crying today," she told Redheaded Blackbelt, describing how she fell to the floor and cried when she heard the news. "I just didn't want it to be real."

The chief urged anyone with information about the shooting to contact APD at 822-2424. ●

HSU Welcomes New President

By Iridian Casarez

iridian@northcoastjournal.com

The Humboldt State University bells rang loudly across campus, 12 rings — it was noon on May 22 and a group of people were walking toward the library. Upon entering the jam-packed lobby filled with HSU faculty, students and community members, the crowd began to applaud: HSU's new president had arrived.

Just a few hours after his announcement as the new president of HSU and successor to retiring Lisa Rossbacher, Tom Jackson Jr. was ready to greet everyone who came to get a first impression.

"We welcome the opportunity not only to reside in this community but do all of the things we hope will happen over the next several years," Jackson told the crowd. "So please, as we go through this process, I ask you, seriously and deliberately, to take the time to stop me and let's chat. ... Tell me your story because, for the two of us, that story is really what's most important."

Earlier in the day, the California State University Board of Trustees officially appointed Jackson as HSU's next president, calling him an "inspirational leader" who has been a champion for "access, quality and student success, all hallmarks of the HSU mission."

Jackson, himself a first-generation college student, will be taking over a university that has put an emphasis on recruiting such students to campus, bolstering their representation on campus. Amid this push, the university has also faced criticism for not doing enough to support its students of color after recruiting them to attend school in a predominantly white county.

A career administrator who comes to HSU after four years at the helm of Black Hills State University in South Dakota, Jackson not only made history as HSU's first black president, but he is also the first president in the CSU system to be at his new campus on the day of his announcement. Loren Blanchard, CSU executive vice chancellor for Academic and Student Affairs, said it was Jackson who made this a priority, saying he and his wife wanted "to make it clear to you all how important this university is to them."

When the Journal asked about his plans for the university, Jackson stressed that his most important concern is its students.

"This is a wonderful place and I'm the eighth person with the keys to keep that going," he said. "My biggest priority is the students and providing them with a meaningful and positive experience here. They chose this campus, this wonderful place to live, and we want to make sure they leave here as a graduate. If you ask me this question again in a couple weeks, a couple months or years, it's going to be the same answer."

Given the recent budget cuts, including the slashing of KHSU and the elimination of the football team, Jackson said there is a "great amount of conversations on healing" going on in the president's office.

In his years at BHSU, Jackson is credited with implementing service learning programs and cultural outreach that brought the university closer to the surrounding community. According to the BHSU site, the school "has increased its presence in the community, including membership on a diverse group of boards and committees, as well as civic clubs and service organizations."

A military veteran who served in the U.S. Coast Guard Reserve, the Army National Guard, the Texas State Guard and the Indiana Guard Reserve, Jackson also worked at BHSU to enhance opportunities for military education, including a reduced tuition pilot program.

When asked about what he likes about HSU, Jackson, a Seattle native, intoned that the place is reminiscent of home.

"I'm from Washington State," he said. "When you put oceans, forests and mountains together, that's it." ●

The Black Market's Legacy

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Fifty dollars worth of weed. That's reportedly what led four young men to arrange via Snapchat a meeting with a 16 year old on the dark Arcata street. According to Arcata Police Chief Brian Ahearn, they'd planned to simply hand over whatever small quantity of black market cannabis $50 buys these days and go on their way, but the 16 year old allegedly had other ideas. He allegedly tried to rob them, ordering them to hand over the weed. When they refused, he opened fire. Taevonne Latimer, 18, was shot "several times" in the torso, according to police, and pronounced dead at a local hospital, despite the frantic efforts of bystanders and first responders to save him. Another 18 year old was shot in the leg.

Fifty dollars worth of weed. An 18 year old killed just weeks shy of his graduation, another's life — and body — forever altered and a 16 year old facing the prospect of spending 25 years to life in prison. To some extent, this is the legacy of prohibition, the devastation that decades of the war on drugs have wrought in startling clarity, played out over the course of a few brief moments with tragic consequences.

To be sure, there are plenty of contributors to this horrific scene. Perhaps most prominent among the lingering questions is how a 16 year old got his hands on a loaded pistol. There are also legitimate questions about the apparent devaluation of human life we are seeing unfold in painful slow motion as Arcata — a once peaceful town — continues to record homicides at an alarming rate, most of them seemingly stemming from petty arguments, perceived slights or cannabis, or some combination of the above.

Some will surely be quick to dispute that this shooting has any ties to the prohibitionist policies that have criminalized cannabis for decades. After all, recreational weed became legal last year and these were essentially just high school kids who couldn't legally purchase cannabis anyway, right? Wrong. Don't believe me — tell me when the last time you recall a teenager being shot over a keg of beer or a carton of cigarettes.

The bottom line is that for decades we as a society have treated cannabis as something to be hidden, hunted and protected. We've encircled a plant with layers of risk that have inflated its value, expanding the exposure to all who come near it. The plant itself is relatively harmless but its societal baggage is one of decades of prosecutions, incarcerations, robberies and killings, as well as a legacy of unreported crimes and cultures of backwoods justice.

This is the black market's ongoing legacy: two teenagers shot, one dead and another facing the rest of his life in prison.

So pardon me when I say I don't give a fuck about your black market. Sure, you can tell me about how it protected profits and, by turn, Humboldt County's economy for decades. You can talk about how it filled our restaurants, storefronts and car dealerships after timber died. You can talk about all the wonders of the libertarian, back-to-the-land communities it enabled to thrive and point to the volunteer fire departments and nonprofits it funded.

And so much of what you'd say is true. But at what cost? Does Humboldt County's economy and subculture justify even one kid dying in the back of a stranger's car? Does it justify the dozens — if not hundreds — of people who died before him, in robberies and backwoods disputes, often left buried in shallow graves or dumped on the side of the road?

There's no longer any excuse. Cannabis is legal. Folks who want to get high can walk into a store and purchase what they need. Farmers and business owners who want to make the plant their livelihoods are free to do so. But it's time to get the black market out of Humboldt County. Forever. ●

Comment Deadline Looms for Controversial Wind Power Project

With the deadline to comment on the draft environmental impact report fast approaching, debate over a proposed wind farm on a ridgeline to the south of the Eel River Valley is heating up.

The project, developed by Terra-Gen, a large, a San Diego-based renewable energy company owned by the private equity firm Energy Capital Partners, would see up to 60 large wind turbines built atop Monument Ridge and Bear River Ridge. Once operational, the farm would contribute an estimated 155 megawatts of renewable energy annually, enough to continuously power 40,000 homes, according to the company. The project is slated to come before the Humboldt County Planning Commission — the governing body with authority over the project permits unless its decision is appealed to the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors — in July. The deadline to comment on the project's draft EIR is June 5.

Project proponents point to global climate change, stressing the urgency of transitioning local and national energy grids away from fossil fuels toward renewable energy sources, stressing that time is running out to reverse course. And while they concede the project comes with environmental impacts, they argue that those have to be weighed against the carbon footprint of doing nothing and carrying on with an energy grid largely tied to natural gas. To some extent casting critics as NIMBYs who want other communities or regions to suffer the impacts of their energy consumption, proponents argue that it's only fair that Humboldt County shoulder the impacts of its energy usage.

"What is the environmental impact of more of the same?" Natalynn DeLapp, a project consultant, said on KMUD's Monday Morning Magazine, adding that one of the impacts outlined in the draft EIR is the visual impact of placing as many as five dozen 600-foot-tall turbines dotting the ridgelines. Some might view that as a blight on the landscape, but DeLapp said she chooses to look at it differently.

"Personally, I look at them and see innovation and our human capacity to evolve and look for new solutions to our ongoing energy needs," she said.

The project is also slated to create some 300 jobs during construction, as well as 15 permanent ones, and generate an estimated $2 million annually in local tax revenue once operational.

But critics of the project — including some in the environmental community, the Bear River Rancheria and the Wiyot Tribe — believe there has to be a better way. They stress the scope of environmental impacts associated with construction of the wind farm and its continued operations.

Adam Canter, tribal biologist for the Wiyot Tribe, said Bear River Ridge is a special place to the Wiyot, considered a "prayer spot," from which one can see almost all of the tribe's ancestral territory. He noted that the proposed site is a "giant coastal prairie" with high coverage of native grasses and plants that would be forever impacted by the project.

Additionally, Canter said the tribe worries about impacts to wildlife and migratory bird species, most acutely the California condor, which is planned to be reintroduced to the North Coast in 2020.

"It is probably the tribe's most sacred bird and part of the Wiyot creation story," Canter said.

The tribe believes in the urgency for renewable energy, Canter said, adding that most residences on the Table Bluff reservation have solar panels, but believes the proposed project "is going to be pretty catastrophic."

Ken Miller, describing himself as a concerned citizen, appeared with DeLapp on the KMUD show and stressed that while many of the farm's environmental impacts will be plain to see — 17 miles of newly paved access roads, a 25-mile clear-cut transmission corridor and thousands of trips by 90-foot trucks — he said others will be hidden. He charged that in all of its estimates of carbon-reduction, Terra-Gen has failed to factor in the carbon costs of construction and materials, which include tens of thousands of yards of concrete, more than 2 million pounds of carbon fiber for the turbine blades and some 24,000 gallons of oil annually to operate the turbines.

Canter and Miller both referred to the project as "green washing," with Miller noting Terra-Gen is owned by Energy Capital Partners, a private equity firm with some $19 billion in energy sector holdings and just Monday announced the acquisition of all of Canadian Utilities fossil fuel-based electricity generation assets, which were valued at $621 million.

Having crunched the numbers, Canter points out that based on Terra-Gen's own carbon displacement estimates, the proposed local project would reduce carbon emissions by 372,000 metric tons a year.

"You would have to build 162 wind projects of this capacity to reduce the national footprint by just 1 percent," he said.

The problem with rejecting this project, DeLapp said, is there currently isn't a better proposal on the table. Nearly a decade ago, she said she opposed a similar proposal from Shell Wind Energy and heard a bunch of concerns similar to those being voiced now. But times have changed, DeLapp said, and there's more urgency than ever to move away from fossil fuels.

"Here we are 10 years later and Humboldt County is still no closer to having a decentralized energy system ... and we are not meeting our energy goals," she said in the KMUD interview.

As the Journal went to press, Terra-Gen was hosting a community meeting in Ferndale. Check www.northcoastjournal.com for a full report on that meeting. Additionally, another community meeting is planned at 5:30 p.m. June 3 at the Winema Theater, 125 Main St. in Scotia.

The Return of Indian Island: After an unexpected delay with the California State Lands Commission, the unprecedented repatriation of Indian Island to the Wiyot Tribe is poised to come before the Eureka City Council for final approval next month, according to City Manager Greg Sparks. "It seems like we're just about there," Sparks said of the much anticipated return of 200 acres of the tribe's ancestral territory on the island in Humboldt Bay. Marketing Contract Delayed: The Eureka City Council voted unanimously May 21 to delay the award of a $370,000 annual contract for marketing services after concerns arose about the fairness of the process, with several council members pointedly voicing frustrations at the lack of information provided to them. The city will now again interview its two finalists — Humboldt Made and the Virginia firm Eddy Alexander — with a five-member panel that will include a council member. The holy month of Ramadan is supposed to be hot. The word itself comes from the root Arabic term for intense heat, which is what you'd be feeling in the ninth month of the Islamic lunar calendar if you were in Saudi Arabia, Morocco, Jordan or Syria. All the better to burn away one's sins, to fast and commemorate the revelation of the Quran to the Prophet Muhammad. But it's cold and drizzling rain in Humboldt, the clouds obscuring the sunset and the moon whose crescent shape starts and ends the observance.

Just after 8 p.m., Emran Essa and his son Nabil begin shuttling boxes of tablecloths, utensils, water and food into the D Street Neighborhood Center in Arcata, their coats beaded with rain. They turn on the lights and set up long folding tables and chairs for the small gathering of Muslims and their non-Muslim guests who'll share the Saturday community iftar, the daily fast-breaking meal. It's a largely immigrant group, with members hailing from Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, Syria, Bangladesh, Pakistan, Jordan, Morocco and Yemen. They're joined by a common faith, if not a first language, ethnicity or food culture. With graduation past and most Humboldt State University students out of town, it will be smaller than the last couple of weeks but no less important.

At a recent prayer service, Emran Essa talked about observance of Ramadan — through prayers and abstaining from sex and food and drink of any kind from sunrise to sunset each day — as one of the Five Pillars of Islam along with testimony of faith, prayer, charity and pilgrimage to Mecca. Essa, who owns Lacey's Cookies manufacturer Desserts on Us, is a Palestinian American of Syrian birth and the local imam, leading worship every Friday in a room off of the Arcata Library that, with a few rugs angled toward Mecca, serves as a mosque for a couple dozen men and one or two women. "Even crying babies are welcome," he says.

"I don't have anybody professional to do it but it's a very small community, so what can you do?" he says with a shrug. Essa took over some 20 years ago when the previous imam left for Turkey. He says he mostly builds his services around things that interest him, things he can study and share. But he steers clear of politics.

"God doesn't talk about Trump," he says. "God doesn't talk about Saddam Hussein. God talks about people who are just and unjust."

People trickle in as Essa and his son unroll rugs at a 45 degree angle from the southeast corner of the room.

"As-salamu alaykum," each of them calls, meaning "peace be with you."

"Wa alaykum as salamu," Emran replies, meaning "peace be with you, too," as he steps over to greet the men with light hugs.

Women arrive and mostly cluster in the back of the room, where a trio of children have discovered the stage and its black velvet curtain. The women give the same greeting and hug their hellos.

At 8:35 p.m., Essa taps his watch and says it's almost time to break the fast and prepare for the sunset prayer. People come to the first table for bottled water and dates. Shoes crowd the doors — hot pink sneakers, worn loafers, pristine high tops all removed before stepping on the carpets. The men line up shoulder to shoulder on the first row of rugs, Essa before them, singing out the opening of the prayer. In the back, a handful of women follow suit. They go through a cycle of three supplications, or rakas, chanting, bending, standing and kneeling to touch their foreheads to the ground with the recitation of passages of the Quran. On the stage, the children are still scuffling along, playing, giggling as the girls in their fancy dresses and matching braids play at scolding the little boy, who is on all fours, pretending he is a cat.

When the prayer ends, most make their way to the long table to fill paper plates. There are fried shrimp, Pakistani stew and rice with chickpeas, a saffron-colored Yemeni rice dish with lamb and potatoes, naan bread, Moroccan savory pie, a dish of tofu and vegetables, and delicate Jordanian sweets.

A shorter man in a brown leather jacket points to the pan of rice, meat and potatoes. "This is zurbian," he says, adding that a web search will reveal how difficult it is to make. (It checks out — some recipes require 23 ingredients.) He gives only his first name, Abdul, but is effusive on the subject of Yemeni cuisine — his wife's in particular. "The spices are like no other spices," he says, adding that those are often smoked before cooking. "It takes time to do."

Essa points to the filet of salmon he brought to the feast and the black seeds on its pale orange flesh. It's seasoned with turmeric and black seeds mentioned in the Hadith, an account of the Prophet Muhammad's words, as "cure for any disease."

"It's fennel seed," says Abdul.

"Science has proven it's beneficial for the body," says Essa with wonder. "It's a cumin seed."

Abdul turns toward the sweets, almost whispering. "It's fennel."

Leaning against the kitchen doorway in a Gap logo hoodie and a baseball hat, Humboldt State University student Tariq Aqahtni surveys the room. He came to the U.S. from Saudi Arabia in 2013 and, after working on his English, began studying criminal justice. "It used to be bigger than this," he says. "It's getting smaller." A fellow student pointed him to the annual gatherings and he says his family in Saudi Arabia is please he found a community he can connect with here. "I don't have any family here but," he waves a hand toward the people moving along the table of food, "I consider these people my family."

Back by the prayer area, a large, bearded white man in a flannel shirt stands in a tight circle with some of the men who've been praying. His name is Paul and he is converting to Islam.

The process is outwardly simple, according to Alaa Abdelrahman, a slim, large-eyed man from Jordan who works on spent fuel storage installation for PG&E's nuclear department. The man must, of course, have faith in his heart and commit himself to prayer. But, Abdelrahman says, to make it official, he need only pronounce in Arabic: "I bear witness that there is no God but Allah with no partners. I bear witness that Muhammad is his prophet." Then it's done and the other men embrace him one by one.

Aisha Abdelrahman wears a rose-colored hijab and a long black dress with a lace hem. She sits with her curly-haired 7-month-old daughter Diana on her knee. Aisha has made the plates of katayef, small, sweet pancakes stuffed with cream and coconut or lightly savory cheese and sprinkled with chopped pistachio nuts. Diana makes a grab for them, pulling at the tablecloth and the other women at the table laugh. Aisha will make more sweets for the Eid al-Fitr, the final breaking of the fast at the end of Ramadan.

"I love the weather and the trees," she says. "In Jordan there's nothing like this." But she misses the iftars with 71 relatives all coming together to share the fast-breaking meal each night of Ramadan. Still, she finds bodily and spiritual rest in the ritual of fasting, and joy in the Arcata gatherings she's attended in the three years since immigrating to the U.S. Instead of finding a Jordanian-American community, as she might have in a large city, here she breaks the fast with families from all over the world.

She met her husband, Alaa, in Jordan, when he had already been living in the U.S. for several years. He was looking for a wife and, she says, "My family knew his family. He see me and," she smiles, "he loves me."

Beside her, Atul Zulkurnain, a high school student from Malaysia attending Northcoast Preparatory Academy in Arcata, breaks into a giggle.

The feeling was mutual, says Aisha. Having granted permission for Alaa to propose, her father told her she could say yes or no. "I love him," she says, beaming at her baby, who opens her toothless mouth wide. "In Jordan it's so easy." She was up for the adventure of uprooting to California, too, and after a year-long engagement and waiting for her papers, she did.

Abby, who is married to Abdul, leaves the table and returns with chocolate covered baklava from the Desserts on Us boxes at the table. Everyone nibbles the sweets with dark mint tea, a specialty of Marrakesh. Abby's hijab is purple with sparkles woven into the pattern of flowers and falls over the shoulders of her tweed coat. She nods at her husband's assertion that while every day is a time of connection to God, Ramadan is special. Children, she says fast only for a few hours at first, gradually preparing to fast all day as adults. "Only try," she says. As for preparing meals while fasting, she's used to it. "It's practice. ... I'm starting feeling full when I fast. I make a lot of food, a lot of sweet," she says, laughing, "but I don't eat."

One of the little girls runs up and hugs Toheed Ahmad's leg. Originally from Pakistan, Ahmad owns the Fourth Street Market-Liquors shop on Samoa Boulevard in Arcata. Asked about the late-night crowd, he grins and says, "Lot of crazy people come in but we get used to it." He's tall with a narrow line of beard circling his mouth.

Essa throws an arm around Ahmad's shoulder and says he's very important. "He brings a lot of people and a lot of food." After a chuckle, they lament the shrinking of the group, which Essa estimates hovered around 75 people but is now down to between 40 and 50, with people moving away and students returning home over the summer.

Ahmad appreciates what he feels are the health benefits of fasting — the body taking a break from digestion — and the time of spiritual contemplation. "It teaches you the self-control because the food is in front of you but you're not eating it. ... It will also teach you about the people who are hungry."

Essa points out that part of the fast is a focusing of intentions. There are exceptions for those who are ill or traveling, he says. But, "You cannot complain, 'Oh, I'm hot, I'm fasting,'" or whine about the length of the day. In Humboldt, for example, daylight lasts about two hours longer than places in the Middle East. "Imagine in Alaska," he says, earning a puffed laugh from Ahmad.

"It's important not to forget religion is all one," says Essa. "How do we deal with one another? Treatment is religion." He added, "The same God sent the Torah, sent the Bible, sent the Quran."

The meal is done and many of the guests are leaving, some with long drives ahead. The food has been packed up and cleared, the tables folded, stacked and stored. Only a handful of men and three women are left to begin the evening prayer. Essa explains that while normally one doesn't use a physical copy of the Quran for services in a mosque, there's nobody available who has it memorized. "The hafiz had to go back to Willow Creek," he says.

At 10:30 p.m., Alaa Abdelrahman stands ahead of Emran and Nabil Essa on the carpets, with Atul Zulkurnain and another woman behind them. He reads from his phone, singing out the first prayer raka in a high tenor that rises above the industrial fan in the kitchen. In the hallway off the side, Diana fusses a little and Aisha retreats to nurse her.

The passage of the Quran chosen for the evening prayer says "that God accepts repentance," Essa explains, running his finger across the pale green page of a worn copy with a silver cover and a crumbling spine. The reading also covers charity for the poor and needy.

"People say religion divides people," Essa says after the service. "You and I read the Quran and get a different idea." But in this hall and in this county, faith seems to have bonded people from wildly varied backgrounds. He says some friends who've moved away have told him they miss praying with this tiny community, even without a proper mosque, because they all know one another and visit each other's homes.

"I love birds, you know," he says, "but people say they only sit together [with their own kind]." He says we can overcome that mental training to separate ourselves from those who are different, but "only when your heart is open." ●

Getting into the Moroccan tea cookie business

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Sweet, fragrant Moroccan tea cookies.

Jmias El Hessni comes out from the kitchen with a plate piled with nine types of cookies and sets them down on the small coffee table.

She explains, in a mixture of halting English, French and Arabic, the names and ingredients in each one.

She wears a pink and navy silk headscarf and glasses with rosy metal frames. She points a delicate, unpainted nail at a soft, powdery yellow coconut cookie in the middle and says it was the kind she made for her sister's wedding.

With help from Devva Kasnitz, El Hessni has spent the last three months putting together a business plan and her application for a cottage food permit so she can sell the cookies retail at events and by special order under the name Moroccan Moments.

Once she has the license, she'll need to take the California Department of Public Health's course on food processing (available online in French) and follow all the regulations regarding kitchen equipment and conditions.

El Hessni has help translating her Arabic from her husband, Abderrahmane El Bahi, and 15-year-old Hajar, the eldest of their three daughters, who has her father's large hazel eyes. Kasnitz also helps with the French. El Hessni's first language is Berber, an indigenous North African language spoken in her home village of Azarwan, outside of Marrakesh, Morocco. It was in Marrakesh some 22 years ago that she met Kasnitz, whose best friend was marrying El Hessni's uncle. The ninth of 11 children, El Hessni was summoned to the city to act as a guide for Kasnitz and the two quickly became close.

Decades later, El Hessni and El Bahi won a visa lottery to immigrate to the U.S. with their girls. El Hessni says it had been a dream of hers to see more of the world, to start a business and to raise her daughters in the U.S. So, the family saved for airfare and she studied French pastry. Once the family settled in at Kasnitz's house in Eureka, El Hessni got to work on the cookies she'd been making with her sisters since she was a teenager.

Depending on the cookie, the process can be painstaking or, well, even more painstaking. El Hessni's and her husband's favorite, the deceptively simple ghoriba, for example, is flourless and made of ground almonds, honey, eggs and orange blossom or rose water. She rolls the mixture into balls and bakes them with a nut pressed on top.

But for the almond variety, first she blanches and skins the nuts by hand, rubbing them with her fingers at the kitchen table for about an hour until the pile is transformed to ivory tablets. Before they can be ground, they have to sit overnight to dry out, lest they yield a soggy cookie. The result is a lightly sweet, rich cookie with a barely crisp exterior and marzipan-like interior that carries the faintest hint of orange or rose.

The almonds are blanched, skinned, dried and ground with sugar for the filling in the warda zahra cookies, too. For these sculpted cookies, El Hessni makes a thin rolled dough that rests overnight to harden a bit so it will hold its flower shape once it's baked and glazed. Finally, they're decorated with tiny candies and sequin-sized flowers stamped out of chocolate and dough. The ones shaped like overstuffed purses are Hajar's favorites.

Hajar helps her mother with baking and has tried her own hand at it. El Hessni laughs and quickly scrolls a second-hand tablet for a photo of a plate of chocolate chip cookies.

"She did the cookies American," she says, setting her husband and daughter chuckling, too.

"The cookies are important for Moroccans," El Bahi explains, since they're presented to all visitors to one's home. "With tea. Always with tea," he says. Though they've met some Arabic speakers, the family has not met any other Moroccans in Humboldt. He tips his head. "We are alone."

El Hessni adds that the cookies are always at weddings and parties, and she planned on bringing a spread of them, along with a savory pie called pastilla, to the Ramadan celebration the next evening at the D Street Neighborhood Center. She sends Hajar to the kitchen for one small plate for tasting — none of them will be eating, since they are fasting during daylight hours during the holy lunar month.

In the business plan for Moroccan Moments, there's brief mention of a tea shop and bakery down the road. But for now, they'll file the paperwork for a cottage business, waiting for the next step and sharing ghoriba and warda zahra with friends. And tea.

Always tea. ●

Punk and the Working Stiff

Ian Carey's Blunder-Bus at the Morris Graves Museum of Art

By Gabrielle Gopinath

Ian Carey's solo show at the Morris Graves Museum of Art features large mixed-media figures with elements of collage. More painted figures than figure paintings, they've been clipped like paper dolls from their original surroundings and re-assembled free-floating on the wall. Carey's scrappy style veers from painstaking to deliberately de-skilled, sometimes careening giddily in the direction of caricature. His protagonist is a white, 30-something Everyman in casual-Friday Dockers and a stocking cap. He comes accompanied by little winged attendants, cutouts on the wall that hover over his shoulder like flies, sometimes tethered to him by strings, like Mylar balloons. Characters are "loosely based on friends and sometimes me, and sometimes public characters," the artist said.

Each grouping emerges from ambient gloom, surrounded by a spotlight's mandala. A finely drawn face with hollow eyes and a soul patch sits atop a turtleneck that turns out to be an irregularly shaped piece of black paper. A cuffed pant leg sketched rapidly in charcoal ends in a photograph of a shoe.

Some of these dudes are bleary-eyed, as if lacking sleep; all of them appear smudged and tense. Their foreheads furrow with anxiety. They are running too hot to be cool. They shamle, skip, reel and, in one case, take to the air with ungainly flapping arms and faces full of gee-whiz wonderment. Their postures and facial expressions range from default awkwardness through many shades of anxiety and dread — not the kinds of expressions people are inclined to allow themselves in public.

Accessory imagery can come across as deliberately banal. There are boxing gloves and fields of sketchily crayoned wildflowers. A productive tension sets up between the detail-oriented portraits and the child-like scrawl of the floral backdrops. When relationships between figures compound, visually interesting things start to happen, as they do in the 2014-2019 multifigure composition "Blest are the Who???"

This work's five nearly life-size figures overlap in a group on the wall but their tightly interlocking forms were composed using a grid; Carey has simply cut away the negative space of the picture plane that would otherwise surround them. "They're not on a traditional rectangle or square," he explained, "but they're formulated as though they were."

Carey said, "The body of the one female figure in that group is based on the body of Christ in the 'Deposition' by [Rogier] van der Weyden," making reference to the great Flemish panel painting of 1435 in the Museo del Prado in Madrid, Spain. Four expressionless male figures support the stiffly trailing body of a woman between them; the grim T-shaped crucifixion device that looms blackly above the action in van der Weyden's painting has been fractured and shoved to the margins. The five forward-facing figures in Carey's work, plus the redundancies and dislocations accomplished through the collage-intensive technique, also bring a modernist touchstone to mind: Pablo Picasso's proto-Cubist blockbuster of 1907, "Les Femmes d'Alger (O. J.)".

"That's me on the right with the hat — I weighed 160 pounds at the time," Carey volunteers, grinning. He points out that the chain of absorbed and loving looks that links the figures in Van der Weyden's painting is absent in his vastly more alienated rendition. "The figures are not looking at each other. They're holding her but they're not touching her."

Carey, a longtime Chicago resident who has been teaching painting at Humboldt State University since 2017, is happy to situate his practice in that city's tradition of gonzo figures. He cites punk as an influence, which might come as a surprise — his characters resemble bumbling corporate boss Michael Scott from the American version of The Office more than they do firebrands like Kathleen Hanna or Ian MacKaye. But the term "punk" has expanded from its 1970s origins to encompass many forms of organized resistance, the artist observes, including simply "living and breathing and existing in opposition to the system." Punk represents "an ever-fluid opposition to a perceived status quo, a reminder of our need to reevaluate and challenge our political realities." In the U.S. especially, Carey notes, punk represents a rare, democratically available form of collective resistance.

Ian Carey's 2014-2019 "Blest are the Who???"

The artist hopes viewers will feel a twinge of "compassion" for these "slightly pathetic" individuals. "Of course, they have to be pathetic, given the times they — we — live in," he said matter-of-factly, citing "the powerless and sense of impotence we all feel now with regard to the systems that structure our lives."

It's true that the charge these twisted figures carry has to do with how constrained they are. These working stiff's don't rage against the machine, at least not in ways that a casual observer would likely notice. Carey's more or less well-meaning Everydudes share some creative DNA with the protagonists in graphic work by Raymond Pettibon and stories by George Saunders. His characters are middle American originals endowed, like all of us, with reservoirs of unspeakably poignant memory and hearts that still beat passionately beneath their ill-fitting, sweatshop-made button-ups. In viewing these works, we come to understand that the saving graces of these men and women are the tiny spaces of resistance they cultivate internally.

Ian Carey's Blunder-Bus will be on view at the Morris Graves Museum of Art through June 30.

Wanderlust

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

There's a lot going on this week. Summer Arts and Music Festival is happening in Benbow, and although I don't know what the post-legalization attendance numbers have been looking like, it's probably still going to be a pretty banging event for those of you rolling through. I myself will not be doing so, having decided to take a quick trip out of the area to better appreciate the things that I love about this remote and sometimes difficult place we call home. If all goes well and my travels aren't visited by calamity, then I will be back in time for my next deadline and to enjoy some of the gigs in the far calendar end of the week. A little perspective never hurt anyone, in the proper dosage anyway. So, for those of you like myself who were dumb enough to hit the road on Memorial Day proper, I hope that your travels have resolved themselves safely. And for the rest of you, keep a seat open for me: I plan to be back in town soon and I like having options.

Enjoy your week.

Thursday

The Blank Tapes is the brainchild of multi-instrumentalist Matt Adams, whose sunburst and faded vintage sound presents like a hot 8-track mash-up from the wet end of a 1970s Dodge Tradesman Van-cum-Shaggin' Wagon. Adams and company roll through town tonight on the Super Bloom tour in support of the group's newest release, Candy. Along for the fun are TERMINATOR, a righteous noise act from Seattle, as well as local flavor Mojave Green. You can get in on the fun at this all-ages show at the Siren's Song at 9 p.m. ($5).

Friday

The Jam has a fun jam funk show tonight at 9 p.m. Portland, Oregon's Far Out West is a quartet fronted by singer/guitarist Liz Chibucos, whose deep vocals sit somewhere between Bonnie Raitt and Chrissie Hynde and ride high in the mix over jams which would not be out of place on any of the mid-70s records by the Grateful Dead. The band returns to Humboldt to cohabitate a stage with local fusion act Spunj. (Price TBA.)

Saturday

Globetrotting musicologist Oryan Peter-

Far Out West plays The Jam at 9 p.m. Friday.

son-Jones is back in town, which means that his act Die Geister Beschwören will be playing at the Clarke Museum tonight at 6 p.m. for Arts Alive. Oryan plans to play pieces arranged for solo classical guitar, as well various stringed instruments from Cuba, Turkey, Peru and his most recent destination, Senegal. Expect folk music in the broadest and most fascinating sense of the term.

Sunday

The Sanctuary is hosting its family-friendly open house, the Casual Cafe, today at 10 a.m. Expect music, coffee, a bake sale and interactive informal workshops with the artists in residence of this living temple of gentle expression. Bring the kids for this one and don't sweat the cost: It's free.

Monday

Blondies has an interesting line-up this evening at 8 p.m. Local twilight-teen folk act Blood Hunny and soft, sweet, velvet-winged whisperers Spirit Notes provide an enticing draw to catch some interesting out-of-town bands on the pre-summer prowl. Portland, Oregon's Bed Bits is a bright and groovy lo-fi surf band from the land of bridges and conjoined rivers, while Olympia, Washington's Thunderworld is a fuzzy snare drum mess that sounds like someone making epic jams through a Tannoy speaker powered by both vacuum tube technology and an actual vacuum cleaner. I like it a lot. ($3-$5.)

Tuesday

The genre known as ragpunk seems to exist to give a voice and musical outlet for contemporary hobo fetishists. A portman-teau of ragtime music, punk, and alcohol-assisted esophageal torture, ragpunk exists to give banjo players and upright bassists something to do if their talents tend more toward strummin' and slappin' than robotically technical playing. If a campfire and a pouch of rolling tobacco could start a band, they would start a ragpunk band. Which isn't to say the music is bad: That isn't the case at all. It's just highly stylized and the players are invested heavily in its mythology, which can endear listeners as well as turn them off, depending on the calibre of the performers. In the case of tonight's show at the Siren's Song, the sounds fall strongly in favor of endearing: Everyone tonight can really fucking play and you should listen to them. Clyde and the Milltailers are a quartet whose songs are punchy, fast, and searingly left wing. I don't know what a milltailer is, but after listening to these chaps, I suspect I'd like to be one. Also on the bill is the excellent one-man band King Strang, who as far as I can tell is pulling double duty tonight providing bass for the headliners. Either way, this one is free, so don't you dare miss it.

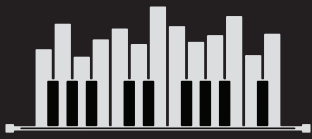

Wednesday

You can enjoy two very different power trios at 8 p.m. at the Siren's Song without anybody stopping you. Oakland's Glowing Brain is a force of nature crafted out of the liquid volume of The Wipers and Motörhead and molded in the dead ear canals of anyone who dared to spend their youth in the blast zone of full-stack amps. Tonight they ride with local twang-thrashers The Sturgeons. (Price TBA.) ●

Diamond Days

Sweet Caroline, it's nearly June, and that means one thing: The season of bat and ball, burgers and beer, families and friends, is here. After a long, wet winter and spring, Humboldt semi-pro baseball is on deck and ready to swing away. With two local teams each playing four to five games a week all summer long, there's ample opportunity for America's favorite pastime.

Go, Crabs, go! Humboldt Crabs Baseball's Opening Day is Friday, May 31 at 7 p.m. at Arcata Ballpark. The 75th anniversary season kicks off with a home game against the Corvallis Knights with the series continuing Saturday, June 1 at 7 p.m. and Sunday, June 2 at 12:30 p.m. ($9 adults, $6 seniors/students, $4 children 12 and under). Grab your cowbell and cushion and cheer on your Crabbies.

Over at Redwood Acres' Bomber Field, the Humboldt B52s launch their season on Friday, May 31, as well, hosting the Fresno A's at 7:05 p.m. That series continues Saturday, June 1 at 5:30 p.m. and Sunday, June 2 at 12:05 p.m. ($5 adults, $3 seniors/kids 5-12, free for kids 4 and under). While you're there rooting for the Five-Twos, sink your teeth into the famous Bomber Burger, a cheese-covered patty topped with lettuce, tomatoes and onions — and lovingly embraced by two grilled cheese sandwiches. Play ball!

Open Your Art

Humboldt County artists are inviting you to come up and see their etchings this weekend and next as part of the North Coast Open Studios. Now in its 21st year, the annual event sees hundreds of area artists extend a welcome to the public to peek into how and where their art is born. You've gotta' have art. And, boy, do we ever. With Humboldt having more artists per capita than anywhere in California, NCOS is a golden opportunity to meet many of them, tour their studios and take home a treasure or two.

The event gets underway with a Kick-off Art Night, Friday, May 31 from 6-9 p.m. with open studios stretching from Fortuna to Trinidad, and east to Blue Lake (free). Participating artists for this night can be found in the 2019 NCOS guidebook, found in the May 22 issue of the Journal or online at www.northcoastopenstudios.com. North Coast Open Studios is in full bloom the weekends of June 1 and 2, and June 8 and 9, with studios open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. (unless otherwise noted in the guidebook). Spend time immersed in the beauty of art and the creative process, taking in an array of art styles, including painting, photography, sculpture, fiber, ceramics, glass, jewelry and more — all while meeting and engaging with the artists and finding out what ignites their imaginations and emotions.

Overachievers Gone Wild

Booksmart

By David Jervis

film@northcoastjournal.com

Reviews

BOOKSMART. Unless you're one of those people who has the sun shining on them every day, high school can be tricky to navigate. Whether it's infuriating or merely tedious, it's quite a trial at the time. Having a best friend with whom to bond can definitely help someone through the highs and lows.

Central to the premise of Booksmart is the bond between best friends Amy (Kaitlyn Dever) and Molly (Beanie Feldstein), two high school seniors who, as the title makes clear, have made the grades in a big way and are off to bigger and better things. But the problem with such a bond is the tendency for sort of a two-person groupthink to take root and blossom into an inability to see all that's going on outside that friendship. On the last day of high school, Amy — behind the wheel of a beautifully boxy 1980s Volvo station wagon (totally on point) — picks up Molly and off they go for a day of saying goodbye to teachers and snarking about the woo-hoo classmates that they'll never have to see again. Molly, the class president who's seen as a know-it-all perfectionist who's concerned about the next year's student government budget (a matter that even her principal, ably played by SNL's Jason Sudekis, doesn't want to talk about) is headed to Yale in the fall. Amy, an equally sharp-tongued but more awkward girl, is bound for a summer in Botswana.

On a restroom visit Molly overhears a trio of fellow students talking smack about her, confronts them and finds that the popular hard-partiers have managed to keep an academic focus. One is headed to Stanford on a scholarship, another is also headed to Yale ("I'm great at handjobs and got a 1530 SAT") while the third is skipping higher ed altogether and headed straight to Google to write code.

The plot kicks into motion — Molly convinces Amy that they have to go attend the party of the year (at the home of Nick, the lackadaisical VP to Molly's apple-shining president), nixing their planned date for a Ken Burns marathon that night. Oh, and Amy, who has been openly out for two years, has a crush on Ryan (Victoria Ruesga), a bespectacled skater girl.

First-time director Olivia Wilde has a great grasp of comedy and the movie is loaded with the supporting cast talent to pull it off. But it's buoyed most by the chemistry between Dever and Feldstein. Their evening is a surreal nightmare of being trapped at the attended-by-no-one yacht party of a rich classmate, followed by a visit to a murder mystery party hosted by a pretentious drama club friend, Lyft rides, dying cell phones and desperately trying to ascertain where Nick's party is.

Now this is the point, dear reader, at which you may be thinking "wait a minute — this sounds a lot like the plot to Superbad." And you wouldn't be wrong at all. The Seth Rogan and Evan Goldberg-penned hit movie of 2007 followed the story of two unpopular lads over one day and long night late in their senior year, following their efforts to try to have as much fun as their classmates, and to hook up with a pair of girls. ilarities, Friedman is Superbad star Jonah Hill's real-life younger sister and there are a few crucial comic plot points in the movie's final third that invite comparison.

But put all that aside — in a lot of ways, Superbad seems like it was made 50 years ago and Booksmart is hilarious, fresh, real and full of inventive oddball touches from start to finish. The screenplay, mainly credited to comedian/actress Sarah Haskins and New Yorker contributor Susanna Fogel, is one of the smartest and cleverest ones so far this year. Dever has the less showy role but is understatedly great, while for Feldstein, this is hopefully a star-making movie. So great as the best friend in Greta Gerwig's Lady Bird, here Feldstein is no second banana but a comic talent brandishing some real depth and heart.

And when you get right down to it, is there a better time for a woke-ass, pointed, raunchy, pro-feminist, biting funny story of a freely lesbian high school senior and her blunt, bossy and brilliant bestie than right now, on the cusp of the summer of 2019? Dever and Feldstein have a loud, cards-on-the-table argument late in the movie that speaks volumes about their relationship, growing up and not knowing everything you think you might despite all your college acceptance letters. In one long shot, it plays out with a sort of lyricism and tells you everything you need to know about Amy and Molly. And it gives you faith that those two young ladies of Generation Z will survive the evening and maybe conquer the world. R. 102M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

AVENGERS: ENDGAME. Joe and Anthony Russo's vast, multi-faceted, three-hour finale is a project management master-class with tragedy, triumph and leavening comedy. Compelling performances are hampered by the requisite climactic battle and antiseptic aesthetic. PG13. 181M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

BRIGHTBURN. Sometimes you find a crash-landed alien baby and instead of growing up to be Superman he makes a hard turn to the dark side. Starring Elizabeth Banks and Jackson Dunn. R. 91M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

A DOG'S JOURNEY. Oh, so now reincarnated pets are a good thing? Starring Josh Gad, Dennis Quaid and Kathryn Prescott. PG. 108M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

THE HUSTLE. A weak, unfunny script and poor pacing in this gender-swapped remake of Dirty Rotten Scoundrels wastes its leads (Rebel Wilson and Anne Hathaway) and only reinforces outdated gender norms it could be skewering. PG13. 94M. BROADWAY.

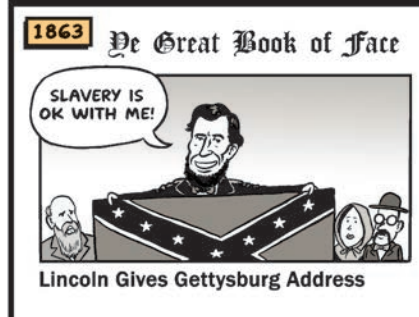

JOHN WICK: CHAPTER 3 - PARABELLUM. This installment outdoes itself with world-creation and giddily satisfying action sequences as Keanu Reeves outruns an international assemblage of assassins with Halle Berry and more dogs. Also starring Laurence Fishburne and Anjelica Houston. R. 130M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

POKÉMON DETECTIVE PIKACHU. Ryan Reynolds voices the cuddly CGI creature, thus precluding a Deadpool crossover. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

THE SUN IS ALSO A STAR. Romance about a young woman (Yara Shahidi) who's about to be deported with her family when she meets a charming stranger (Charles Melton) on the street in New York. PG13. 100M. BROADWAY.

Terraforming Mars

Part 1 of 2

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Say the word quickly and it doesn't sound that difficult. We know how to warm Earth (unfortunately) so it shouldn't take much to warm much smaller Mars. After that, it's just a hop, skip and jump to create a breathable atmosphere, and there we have it, Earth Two. A second chance to get it right — or, more cynically, screw it up again. OK, it's a little more complicated than that. Let's look at some of the challenges.

We know that Mars has the necessary key ingredients to create an Earth-like biosphere: carbon dioxide, nitrogen and (especially in high latitudes) water. However, terraforming means different things to different people. For some — call it "terraforming-lite" — it means warming the planet from its present stable climate [average surface temperature -60 C (-76 F), thin atmosphere, thick polar caps] to a second, more temperate "setpoint" [average temperature 15 C (59 F), thick atmosphere, thin polar caps]. Given those more clement conditions, water will flow, hardy plants can thrive and humans will be able to survive on the surface without pressure suits, albeit with oxygen rebreathers (see illustration). "Full terraforming," on the other hand, is achieved when the atmosphere is rich in oxygen (>13 percent at 3 psi partial pressure) and low in carbon dioxide (<1 percent), so that humans and animals can breathe unassisted. Currently, Mars' thin atmosphere contains 95 percent CO₂ and about 0.1 percent oxygen. These two basic stages of terraforming shouldn't be confused: One's short term and technological, the other is long-term and biological.

Terraforming-lite: By setting up solar-powered factories to synthesize so-called "perfluorinated" gases and pump them into the thin Martian atmosphere, we should be able to achieve terraforming-lite in a century. These gases are highly efficient greenhouse gases. That is, they snare the solar flux falling on a planet, trapping sunlight energy and thus warming the surface. Perfluorite compounds are our best bet for such gases, since all the necessary ingredients are present on Mars. (Our Curiosity rover recently detected

Artist/author Michael Carroll imagines how Martian explorers might venture out once the atmosphere is thick and warm enough for them to doff their pressure suits. The carbon dioxide atmosphere would require rebreathers that absorb the CO₂ in exhaled breath, allowing the unused oxygen to be recirculated. Backpacks containing additional oxygen would permit hours-long outside activities. The lighter-than-air vehicle is based on a design by Mitchell Clapp. Courtesy of the artist fluorine.) Besides being super-efficient greenhouse gases, they're nontoxic, don't affect the ozone layer and are resistant to degradation by the sun's UV radiation.

Once we've raised the temperature of Mars by just a few degrees, the warming process will be self-sustaining, a runaway greenhouse effect. That's because warming will release frozen carbon dioxide — another greenhouse gas — from the polar caps and from vast deposits we believe, somewhat optimistically, lie just beneath the surface.

Full terraforming: Once water starts flowing, oceans will fill, rain will fall and — key to the next step — we can introduce plants from Earth which convert soil nitrates and perchlorates into nitrogen and oxygen gas: the magic of photosynthesis. On Earth, when you factor in oceans, deserts and other non-vegetated areas, average photosynthesis is a pretty inefficient process, around 0.01 percent. Using that figure for Mars, full terraforming would take maybe 100,000 years. The trick, then, is to maximize opportunities for photosynthesis by seeding plants everywhere they can possibly grow. A leaf has a photosynthetic efficiency of about 5 percent (although genetic engineering will no doubt improve on that), so an optimally vegetated Mars could produce a breathable atmosphere in around 1,000 years. (Compare that with the hundreds of millions of years it took to photosynthesize a breathable atmosphere on Earth.)

Next week, I'll discuss the ramifications of terraforming and some potential deal-breakers. ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) is cautiously optimistic that our ventures to Mars will be longer-term than the "flags and footprints" moon missions.

NOTICE OF PROPERTY TAX DELINQUENCY AND IMPENDING DEFAULT
Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3351, 3352

I, John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify as follows:

That at close of business on June 30, 2019 by operation of law, any real property (unless previously tax-defaulted and not redeemed) that have any delinquent taxes, assessments, or other charges levied for the fiscal year 2018-19, and/or any delinquent supplemental taxes levied prior to the fiscal year 2018-19 shall be declared tax-defaulted.

That unless the tax defaulted property is completely redeemed through payment of all unpaid amounts, together with penalties and fees prescribed by law or an installment plan is initiated and maintained; the property may be sold subsequently at a tax sale to satisfy the tax lien.

That a detailed list of all properties remaining tax-defaulted at the close of business on June 30, 2019, and not redeemed prior to being submitted for publication, shall be published on or before September 8, 2019

That information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector at 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, California 95501 (707)476-2450.

I certify or (declare), under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

John Bartholomew
Humboldt County Tax Collector

Executed at Eureka, Humboldt County, California, on May 13th, 2019. Published in the North Coast Journal on May 16th, May 23rd, & May 30th, 2019.

NOTICE OF IMPENDING POWER TO SELL
TAX-DEFAULTED PROPERTY
Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3361, 3362

Pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code 3691 and 3692.4, the following conditions will, by operation of law, subject real property to the Tax Collector's power to sell.

1) All property for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for five or more years.

Note: The power to sell schedule for nonresidential commercial property is three or more years of tax-defaulted status, unless the county adopts, by ordinance or resolution, the five-year tax default schedule.

2) All property that has a nuisance abatement lien recorded against it and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.

3) Any property that has been identified and requested for purchase by a city, county, city and county or nonprofit organization to serve the public benefit by providing housing or services directly related to low-income persons and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.

The parcels listed herein meet one or more of the criteria listed above and thus, will become subject to the Tax Collector's power to sell on July 1, 2019, at 12:01 a.m., by operation of law. The Tax Collector's power to sell will arise unless the property is either redeemed or made subject to an installment plan of redemption initiated as provided by law prior to close of business on the last business day in June. The right to an installment plan terminates on the last business day in June, and after that date the entire balance due must be paid in full to prevent sale of the property at public auction.

The right of redemption survives the property becoming subject to the power to sell, but it terminates at close of business on the last business day prior to the date of the sale by the Tax Collector.

All information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, CA 95501, (707)476-2450.

The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of June 2019, is shown opposite the assessment/parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Parcel/Assessment Number (APN/ASMT), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the Assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map, if applicable, and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The Assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the Assessor's office.

Astrology

Free Will Astrology

Week of May 30, 2019

By Rob Brezsný

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In the coming weeks it will make good sense for you to travel down winding paths replete with interesting twists and provocative turns. The zigzags you'll be inspired to pursue won't be inconvenient or inefficient, but rather will be instrumental in obtaining the healing you need. To honor and celebrate this oddly lucky phase, I'll quote parts of "Flying Crooked," a poem by Robert Graves. "The butterfly will never master the art of flying straight, yet has a just sense of how not to fly: He lurches here and here by guess and God and hope and hopelessness. Even the acrobatic swift has not his flying-crooked gift."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Has a part of you become too timid, docile, or prosaic? Is there an aspect of your beautiful soul that is partially muzzled, submissive, or housebroken? If so, now is a favorable time to seek an antidote. But listen closely: the cure isn't to become chaotic, turbulent, and out of control. It would be counterproductive to resort to berserk mayhem. Here's a better way: be primal, lush, and exciting. Be wildly playful and unpredictably humorous and alluringly intriguing. Try experiments that rouse your rowdy sweetness, your unkept elegance, your brazen joy, and your sensual intelligence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): I prefer live theater over movies. The glossy flawlessness of films, accomplished by machines that assemble and polish, is less emotionally rich than the direct impact of live performers' unmediated voices, bodies and emotions. Their evocative imperfections move me in ways that glossy flawlessness can't. Even if you're not like me, Gemini, I invite you to experiment with my approach for a while—not just in the entertainment you choose, but in all areas of your life. As much as possible, get your experience raw and unfiltered.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): I've got a message for you from Cancerian poet Tyler Knott Gregson. Please read it every day for the next 15 days, including when you first wake up and right before sleep. Here it is: "Promise me you will not spend so much time treading water and trying to keep your head above the waves that you forget, truly forget, how much you have always loved to swim."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): In 2003, a group of thieves in Antwerp, Belgium pulled off the biggest jewelry heist in history. To steal the diamonds, gold, and other gems, together worth more than $100 million, they had to outsmart security guards, a seismic sensor, a protective magnetic field, Doppler radar, infrared detectors, and a lock. I mention this, Leo, because I suspect that in the coming weeks you will have a comparable ability to insinuate yourself into the presence of previously inaccessible treasures, secrets and codes. You'll be able to penetrate barriers that have kept you shut off from valuable things. (P.S. But I hope that unlike the Antwerp thieves, you'll use your superpowers in an ethical manner.)

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): In the northeast corner of Spain, bordering France, is an area known as Catalonia. With its own culture and language, it has a long history of seeking complete autonomy. On four occasions it has declared itself to be independent from Spain. The most recent time was in 2017, when 92 percent of the Catalans who voted expressed the desire to be free of Spain's rule. Alas, none of the rebellions have succeeded. In the latest instance, no other nation on Earth recognized Catalonia's claim to be an independent republic. In contrast to its frustrated attempts, your own personal quest to seek greater independence could make real progress in the coming months. For best results, formulate a clear intention and define the precise nature of the sovereignty you seek. Write it down!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A Libran blogger named OceanAlgorithms wrote, "I'm simultaneously wishing I were a naturalist whose specialty is finding undiscovered species in well-explored places; and a skateboarding mathematician meditating on an almost-impossible-to-solve equation as I practice my skateboard tricks; and a fierce forest witch who casts spells on nature-despoilers; and a gothic heroine with 12 suitors; and the sexiest cat that ever lived." I love how freewheeling and wide-ranging OceanAlgorithms is with her imaginative fantasies. In light of current astrological omens, I encourage you to do the same. Give yourself permission to dream and scheme extravagantly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Geologists aren't exactly sure why, but almost 6 million years ago, the Strait of Gibraltar closed up. As a result, the Mediterranean Sea was cut off from the Atlantic Ocean, and within a thousand years, it had mostly disappeared. Fast forward 600,000 years. Again, geologists don't understand how it happened, but a flood broke through the barrier, allowing the ocean to flow back into the Mediterranean basin and restore it to its previous status as a sea. I propose that we invoke that replenishment as a holy symbol for the process you're engaged in: a replenishment of your dried-out waters.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): I invite you to meditate on this proposal from freelance writer Radha Marcum: "The spiritual definition of love is that when you look at the person you love, it makes you love yourself more." I hope there's a lot of that kind of action going on for you in the next four weeks. According to my assessment of life's secret currents, all of creation will be conspiring to intensify and deepen your love for yourself by intensifying and deepening your love for other people. Cooperate with that conspiracy, please!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Is there a creature on earth that's more annoying than the mosquito? I've never heard anyone gaze upon one of the pesky monsters sucking blood out of her arm and say, "Aw, what a cute little bug." And yet every year there is a town in Russia that holds a jokey three-day celebration in honor of the mosquito. The people who live in Berezniki even stage a "most delicious" competition, in which people allow themselves to be pricked by mosquitoes for twenty minutes, with an award going to whomever accumulates the most bites. I highly approve of the spirit of this approach for your own use in the coming weeks, Capricorn. If you have fun with the things that bother you, I bet they won't bother you as much.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It's the Forever Season, Aquarius. You have a poetic license to act as if your body will live for a hundred years and your soul will live for all eternity. You are authorized to believe that in the coming decades you will grow steadily wiser, kinder, happier, and wilder. During the Forever Season, you may have dreams like flying over a waterfall at sunset, or finding the lost magic you were promised before you were born, or discovering the key to a healing you feared would always elude you. As you careen through this unpredictable grace period, your understanding of reality may expand dramatically. I bet you'll get practical epiphanies about how to express yourself with greater effectiveness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A musical historian from Cambridge University decided it would be amusing to perform forgotten songs that were written in the Rhineland a thousand years ago. His research wasn't easy, because musical notation was different back then. But he ultimately reconstructed the tunes in ways that he felt were 80 percent faithful to the originals. He and other musicians subsequently performed and recorded them. I propose a somewhat comparable assignment for you in the coming weeks, Pisces. You will benefit, I believe, from trying to recover the truth about events that occurred a long time ago and/or by trying to revivify old beauty that has new relevance. ●

Homework: Finish this sentence: "The one thing that really keeps me from being myself is _____." Testify at Truthrooster@gmail.com.

Community Spotlight:

ORBE Program

The Outdoor Resilience Building Experience Program or ORBE Program started in the fall with a four-week session funded by the Stephanie Perrett community fund. In the Spring the official grant from the Timothy Salvos and Alexander Salvos fund from Humboldt Area Foundation initiated the pilot program with four different schools participating in the county: Fuente Nueva, Peninsula School, Orick, and Big Lagoon. ORBE's main focus is taking low opportunity, Humboldt based 4th-7th graders and teaching them through indoor and outdoor based activities.

"Our program is based out of Big Lagoon and originally started as me taking kids kayaking for school activities. I then learned about Outdoor Resilience Building and the program took off from there with a lot of help from the Humboldt Area Foundation and many local business sponsors," explains Shane Harmon, ORBE's lead educator. "We take kids that may not have the opportunity to experience situations like this and take them out on adventures. We combine students and teachers and go out twice a week for 10 weeks during the fall and spring"

"A huge part of ORBE is the relationship building between the private and public sectors," explains Shane. "Some of our main business sponsors are Kayak Zak's, The Club for Fitness, Far North Climbing Gym, Los Bagels and Pacific Outfitters. I want to thank all of them for everything they do. We also have numerous public sponsors and are always on the lookout for more. I think it's important for the greater community to know that this was an evidence based pilot program that we would like to see grow and be a service that can be offered to other public schools in the future. Any support to further this program would be greatly appreciated. To learn more about the ORBE program or ways to contribute, send a DM on Instagram to @ORBEHumboldt."
